

Mr. Coenen insisted on more information from the management.
 The President requests that this question be asked more specifically.
 Mr. Coenen asks what has been done for the creditors, while the debtors are being helped.
 Mr. Vethers acknowledges that a list has been done for debtors, both by the bank and by the government. The purpose of the Bontenroeder is to help debtors through the law, but has been informed that creditor-debtors can also be supported. The creditor benefit from the help to debtors, because "slaughtered" debtors would soon losses for the creditors. The bank will try to achieve for the creditors through the reorganization what they so dearly desire. Creditors who absolutely need money should discuss the matter with the administrators. The board of directors of the bank. The bank has stated that the administrators can turn to it for this. They are also ready to help from that side.
 In response to a question, the President stated that in the previous meeting only 6 persons opposed the moratorium with f1834.31. This is therefore negligible compared to the enormous amount of powers of attorney that the Handelsbank has.
 A cleric (whose name we could not understand) inquires about securities that have been pledged. He asks if they are still there and if they are coming back.
 The President replies that the administrators will be appointed at the latest next week and that they will have those questions to answer. Otherwise there are trustees. The cleric liked to have an answer from the management to reassure many. Mr. v. Helst replies that those securities have been reclaimed pursuant to the current account conditions. The securities in open custody are all present.
 One of the speakers asked if they can get it back now. The President answers in the negative. One has to wait for the administrators to be appointed, which will be done very soon.
 Three administrators and five experts will be appointed, people of great ability and integrity, who after a few months will issue a report, in which they will establish in a clear and exact, impartial manner the state of the estate. On the basis of that report, the Court will then decide definitively on a permanent moratorium.
 The President notes that so far 8,500 creditors, not counting the hundreds in the previous meeting, with a total amount of 11 million, have declared themselves in favor of provisional suspension of payments.
 After that, a vote is taken.
 Only one person was against moratorium.
 The President then notes that the overwhelming majority of the creditors represented have expressed their overwhelming majority in favor of granting a provisional suspension of payments with an overwhelming majority as regards the amount.
 The second and last meeting will be closed at 10 minutes past two.
 In the first and second meeting, Messrs. B. E. Tilman, agent of the Dutch Central Bank and the accountant J. Ebsch requested by the court to act as experts to answer any questions that may be asked. However, this has not turned out to be necessary.

| | | | |
|--|--|--|--|
| | | | |
|--|--|--|--|